Inclusion Dialogue

The Anatomy of Ontario's Adversarial Relationship with Muslims

There can be no conversation that can occur where an entire religion is understood. Religions are not monolithic, nor are their followers. This conversation will not be in defence of the Islamic religion or Muslims. Instead, this session will focus on the politically-endorsed aggression, demonization, suspicion and oppression of Muslims in a contemporary Central-Canadian context.

Join us for a critical conversation that magnifies only a few mechanisms that socialize and normalize the generally accepted perception that Muslim lives, values, and presence are antithetical to Canadian "values." Most importantly, we will collectively analyze and hypothesize how these values seep into educational contexts among students, instructors, and post-secondary curricula.
